REMARKABLE!

By Martin Kaynan

Lead Me Home chronicles the history of a wagon train, in the 1840s, traveling toward Oregon from the Midwest. The story has well developed characters who overcome many hardships and grow in strength as the months go by. The story is fiction, but as you read you feel you're part of an autobiography, as if the author had lived it herself. Ms. Hupp had to have spent many, many hours and days researching the unique dangers of so many rivers they had to cross, whether it was quicksand, rocks, white water, etc. Add that to the slope and characteristics of the different mountains they had to cross, where there was grazing land for their oxen, mules and horses etc. the reader can only describe Lead Me Home as remarkable!. A great read.

Climb Aboard for the Ride

By Marsha

The rigors of covered-wagon pioneering are palpable in this excellently researched and beautifully crafted historical fiction. Readers will become deeply involved in the Mac/Jenny relationship as these two young people of vastly dissimilar backgrounds grapple with (and seek to resolve under often hostile circumstances) their respective inner torments. Lead Me Home pulled me in, held me all the way, and left me looking forward to Volume Two.

Great Historical Fiction

By Sally Jadow

Lead Me Home is a wonderful story of two persons thrown together by fate who join a wagon train headed for Oregon. It is beautifully written and well researched. I can't wait for the sequel!
