An introduction to a new way of looking at history, from a perspective that stretches from the beginning of time to the present day, Maps of Time is world history on an unprecedented scale. Beginning with the Big Bang, David Christian views the interaction of the natural world with the more recent arrivals in flora and fauna, including human beings.

Cosmology, geology, archeology, and population and environmental studies—all figure in David Christian's account, which is an ambitious overview of the emerging field of "Big History." Maps of Time opens with the origins of the universe, the stars and the galaxies, the sun and the solar system, including the earth, and conducts readers through the evolution of the planet before human habitation. It surveys the development of human society from the Paleolithic era through the transition to agriculture, the emergence of cities and states, and the birth of the modern, industrial period right up to intimations of possible futures. Sweeping in scope, finely focused in its minute detail, this riveting account of the known world, from the inception of space-time to the prospects of global warming, lays the groundwork for world history—and Big History—true as never before to its name.

Big History made accessible

By The Pilgrim

I was looking for an accessible Big History book and found it in Maps of Time. I particularly enjoyed the chapters that covered the emerging agricultural period and the beginnings of regional and global networks. The book describes regional behavior patterns that are still played out today despite the passage of many centuries and completely different (on the surface) political structures. The big messages were: it's happening fast, what happened before will happen again (though it will probably happen faster), and in the long run life ends and the universe winds down to nothing. But right now there's plenty to do!

This is the kind of history we have needed for ages. I will keep it beside my reading chair forever. I find something new every time I open it.

History of humanity

By Jim B.

Our relevant history goes back 3-5 million years not a few thousand years. If we want to understand and fix the problems we face today we need to understand our complete history and how evolution designed us.
